CARR-185 Masonic Hall, Church of God Church and Parsonage (site)

The house that became the Church of God Parsonage appears from the records to have been a log house built by John Yater circa 1813. It was sold in 1840 from Yater's estate to William Roberts. During the mid-nineteenth century, the building was enlarged to form a double house. It was a two-story structure covered in weatherboard and had a gable roof. Each section contained three bays and the entrances were located on the inner sides of the sections (see photograph on page 9). In 1882, the Church of God purchased the house from the heirs of William Roberts and used it for their parsonage until 1932. Afterwards, it was rented as apartments until 1976 when it was destroyed by a fire. The current building at 3462 Uniontown Road was constructed by the Taneytown Bank and Trust Company in 1979. In that year, the bank moved from its 1907 building, located farther east on Uniontown Road, which it generously donated to Historic Uniontown, Inc. By contemporary historic preservation standards, the new bank building is not completely successful as an example of sensitive new construction in an historic district. Historic preservation literature about new construction in historic districts promotes designs that recognize the district's architectural character in scale, massing, ornamental details, siting, and landscaping. While the "Williamsburg-style" bank building might have nostalgic appeal, its mock-colonial design does not reflect the character of the rural Federal-style buildings in this section of Uniontown. The scale, massing and certain details of the building, including its one-story height and one-bay portico, are unlike those of other buildings in Uniontown. Overall, the new bank building presents a design that lacks appreciation of the finer characteristics of Uniontown's architectural heritage.

The property owned by the Taneytown Bank and Trust Company is the site of the Uniontown Masonic Hall (1814-1828), the Bethel Church of God Church (1882-1976) and the Church of God Parsonage (1813-1932; building destroyed in 1976). The Door-to-Virtue Lodge No. 46 of the Masons was established at nearby Pipe Creek in 1811. In 1813, the Lodge moved to Uniontown and petitioned the Maryland legislature for a lottery to raise money for the construction of the Uniontown Masonic Hall, which was built in 1814. Dr. Jacob J. Weaver, Jr., provides the following description of the Masonic Hall: "The hall was a two story building constructed of brick, with the gable end toward the street; there was one entrance constructed more or less artistically with a good sized column at each side of the door; the door opened into a large hallway in which was a stairway which led to the lodge room above. The first story was used for the public school or any public assembly, and the second was occupied by 'Door-to-Virtue Lodge.'" In 1824, the Lodge moved its headquarters to Westminster and the building was sold. In 1828, it was demolished after being damaged by a severe storm.

The Bethel Church of God constructed their new church in 1882, when they abandoned the early meeting house on Trevanion Road (see page 19). The church was a Gothic-style structure with a gable-front main facade. It had two entrances, one on each side of a center window. The windows and doors of the church had pointed arch trim. Above the central window was a circular window with a rose-shaped design. Above that was a datestone, and an octagonal belfry was on the roof. The church was covered in stucco during the early twentieth century and with formstone in the 1960s. The building was destroyed by a fire in 1976.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This is an interesting house (but not uncommon in this town) of frame construction in a two part composition and now serves as a duplex apartment house. Whether or not it was built as a duplex (or in a row house style) as its original form was difficult to discern without adequate time.

The S. Elevation (front) is 6 "bays" in length, viz: W.W.D. — D.W.W. with three "bays" (windows) above ea. 1st. level arrangement.

The Roof is "A" frame with an interior chimney at ea. end. Eave cornice is plain and all windows are the Victorian 2/2 sash.

At the S. Elevation is a one story and shed roof porch extending from the outside edge of ea. door (centered). The posts of this porch are of slight interest as they are hollow with a jig saw pattern cut into the plates.
